From the Kansas City Journal.

Some time ago Kansas newspapers that white weasels are extremely rare. Lewis and Clark in 1804, in the journal of their famous expedition, speak of having procured from an Indian on the Missouri "a weasel which was perfectly white, except the extremity of the tail, which was black." Perhaps this weasel was the progenitor of the Oak Mills animal. By the way, it seems that Kansas is coming back to its primitive condition again, especially as regards wild animals. Many wild creatures that were thought to have long since disappeared from our soil are making their appearance again. A little over a year ago a paroquet was killed on the Remsburg farm east of Potter. Paroquets swarmed in this locality in the early days. A beaver is occasionly seen in the Missouri river along the Kansas shore. They were formerly as caught a beaver in the Kaw river near

Sam and Will McConnell killed a large black bear near Elk City some time ago John M. Hicks of Kingman county killed a fine specimen of a bald eagle out there recently. John Burns caught a white a perfect albino and had pink eyes. Charles Husted, near Lawrence, comes forward with a black pocket gopher capfured near that place. It is on exhibition at the state university. Some time ago a deer was roaming about in the western part of Atchison county, but we have not heard whether it was captured or not. Deer were once plentiful and Atchison county has a stream named for them. Elk. antelope, huffalo, wild turkeys and other game which once abounded here have entirely disappeared, but we may expect a stray specimen of most any of these primitive beasts and birds to bob up any old time.
